

RUMORS RIFE AS STEEL CONFERENCE IS CALLED IN OHIO

One is That Republic Steel Might Expand Its Operations

TO CLEVELAND AREA

Topic Discussed Said To Be The "Back-To-Work Movement"

By James L. Kilgallen
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
YOUNGSTOWN, O., June 28—(INS)—A conference between executives of the Republic Steel Corporation, city officials of Cleveland and Major-General Gilson D. Light, commander of the Ohio National Guard in this area, aroused speculation today.

The rumored possibility that Republic steel, one of the four big independent steel companies involved in the strike, might be planning to expand its operations to the Cleveland area was given no official verification. In Major-General Light's behalf it was stated the topic discussed at the conference was "the decided increase in the back-to-work movement."

The conference was held in the Youngstown Armory. No details were given out. Among those who visited General Light were Elliott Ness, safety director of Cleveland; his assistant, Robert W. Chamberlin; R. J. Wysor, president of Republic Steel; C. M. White, executive vice-president in charge of operations of Republic Steel; J. A. Voss, director of industrial relations of Republic, and Harry Woodhead, an official of Truscon Steel Company, a subsidiary of Republic with plants in Cleveland, Canton and elsewhere.

Here in Youngstown, one of the focal points in the seven-state steel strike, the C. I. O. has been admittedly losing ground in the past 48 hours and the steel officials have made no secret of their jubilation. The "back-to-work" movement in the plants of the Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company and the Republic Steel Corporation has been gaining ground.

Philip Murray, chairman of the steel workers' organizing committee, and other C. I. O. officials emphatically dispute the claims of the companies that the men are going back to their jobs in droves. They say company figures are greatly exaggerated and that not more than 15,000 of the 100,000 men affected by the strike in the four big independent steel companies have returned to their jobs. The companies involved are Republic, Youngstown

PUPIL SAVES INSTRUCTOR FROM DROWNING IN POOL

Value of Life-Saving Instruction is Proven at Doylestown Pool

STRUCK HEAD IN DIVE

DOYLESTOWN, June 28—A pupil of a life-saving course at the Fanny Chapman Memorial Swimming Pool, here, on Friday, saved the life of his instructor, Dick Harris, associate instructor, who was saved from drowning by the skillful life-saving work of Bob Conroy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph J. Conroy.

Harris was doing some diving from one of the boards at the pool in the afternoon when he slipped and struck the back of his head on the board, scraping the side of his body and falling unconscious into the pool.

Conroy, an expert swimmer and diver, who learned all of his life-saving knowledge at the local pool, saw the instructor fall into the pool. When Harris remained along the side of the pool near the bottom for an unusually long time, Conroy dived in after him and brought Harris, who weighs much more than his rescuer, to the surface of the water.

Harris was unconscious when brought to the top, and Head Instructor Wolfe, who was on the opposite side of the pool, assisted lifting him from the water. First aid was immediately administered and Harris regained consciousness for a few minutes and then began to show the effects of the accident.

A doctor was summoned and it was found that Harris received a slight concussion of the brain. He was taken to his home in Buckingham.

By Warren Van Dyke
(Secretary of Highways)

HARRISBURG, June 25—The summer months revive an inherent urge in most Pennsylvanians to spin along the highways to see more of the State's natural beauties that stretch beyond the vicinity of their homes.

This year, more than ever, residents and visitors are taking to their cars in greater numbers to explore the vast expanse of our "Scenic State." As a result, Pennsylvania's great highway system now is being subjected to its heaviest test in many a year. That it will merit the reputation of the greatest in the nation is unquestioned in my mind.

In anticipation of a vast influx of travelers, the department's maintenance forces spent months during the winter and spring in grooming the highways. Our network of more than 40,000 miles of improved roads now stands ready to provide better and safer driving.

This department is constantly engaged in the task of insuring driving comforts for the motorist and his family who set out to bask in the roadside wonders. Everything possible

TELLS OF EFFORTS TO STOP POLLUTION OF THE DELAWARE

C. Joel Young Says Coke Ovens Along Lehigh River Are Cause of Fish Dying

2 STATES CO-OPERATING

Delaware Valley Association To Continue Efforts to Have Canal Cleaned

Efforts by Pennsylvania and New Jersey to clean up the Delaware river are progressing, according to C. Joel Young, who is affiliated with the State Fish Commission. Mr. Young was one of the speakers at a meeting of the Delaware Valley Fish, Game and Forestry Protective Association held at Point Pleasant, Friday evening.

Mr. Young in his talk told of the work being done by the two states to clear the Delaware River of pollution which annually causes the destruction of thousands of fish and other aquatic life.

It was pointed out that cyanide from the coke works along the Lehigh river, flows into the Delaware and is responsible for the death of many fish. It was stated that the installation of filter plants will assist in removing the cyanide from the water.

Mr. Young informed the members of the association that the conditions are much improved, however, and that this has been brought about largely through the co-operation of the industrial firms located on both the Delaware and Lehigh Rivers.

During the brief business session, which was in charge of the president, M. J. Coyle, of Point Pleasant, announcement was made that seven new members had been gained, bringing the total enrollment to approximately 96.

William Brillman, of Point Pleasant, was added as a member of the fish committee. Donald Crawford reported that the association had netted $18.50 as the result of an advertising campaign.

Horace Robinson and several other members spoke briefly of the excellent program presented last Sunday in connection with the dedication of Lake Warren in Nockamixon township.

Before adjournment it was decided to hold no meetings in July and August, but the members were urged to attend the next meeting which will be held on Friday evening, September 24.

The secretary was directed to write letters to James F. Bogardus, State Secretary of Forests and Waters, and to Attorney General Charles J. Margiotti, asking that they do all in their power to have the canal restored and maintained. It was pointed out during the brief discussion that for months the canal, located along one of the most scenic routes in the State, has been neglected and that little time should be lost in bringing about this repairs.

NEW IMMIGRATION BILL

Attacked as exceeding its two chief purposes, the Kerr-Coolidge immigration bill after being passed in the House was defeated in the Senate last year. The Dies bill, a compromise, has been sent to the Senate from the House.
It would strengthen Federal powers to deport alien criminals and gangsters, and give the immigration authorities limited leeway, for three years, in which to relax the present laws when they inflict extreme hardships. Powers to apply discretion in the "hardship cases" have been sought and strongly supported in Congress and public discussions for years.

The milder Dies bill is entitled to the Senate's favorable consideration. Deportation is indeed harsh when, as at times the law has required, it is enforced against parents who believe themselves legally in the United States, who have proved good citizens and who are forced to leave dependent families in this country.

On the other hand, the need is even more urgent for extension of jurisdictions and addition to Federal powers which will reach non-citizen criminals.

In behalf of the measure, the statistical claim is made that a stronger law could rid the country of 23,000 gunmen, racketeers and narcotics dealers and smugglers.

And that—as all except the offenders will agree—is much to be desired.

WHY SUNBURN HURTS

The discovery by science that some rays of ultra-violet light have killing power probably will not be doubted by sleepless vacationers who are nursing sun-burned backs and shoulders. The new hypothesis is that, while many ultra-violet rays are beneficent and life-giving, others of low wave length literally shake apart the molecules of acid in living cells by their exceedingly rapid wave vibrations. The result is death of the cells—in the case of human beings, this hurts.

From the vacationer's standpoint the problem would appear to be how to encourage and welcome the friendly rays of the sun and at the same time turn a cold (that is, unbaked) shoulder to the low wave length rays. If a perfect balance could be reached, life would indeed be happy for the epidermis.

The probability is, however, that, in spite of the revelations of the learned researchers, in spite of wave lengths, sojourners on the sea, on the beach (and in such bathing suits, too!) and in the hills will go on defying ultra-violet mysteries to make a solar holiday.

In consequence of this proceeding on the part of the teacher, the maternal ire has been roused, and there are ominous hints of a remonstrance being brought before the board of directors—and a removal is anticipated, and by many—well, would not be thought unwholesome. "BLACK ORCHIDS" by F. V. W. MASON

SYNOPSIS

Ian Gray, First Secretary to the American Minister to Austria and his friend, Leonard Holt, are sitting with a group of officers on the terrace of the famous Hotel Duna-Palota, when the conversation turns to the fascinating Countess Lolita von Waldeck. Several broken hearts are attributed to Lolita and d'Armonot, one of the officers, claims a fatal duel was fought on her account. Leonard cannot stand the incriminations and comes to Lolita's defense. Ian wonders at his friend's interest for Leonard is engaged to Ilya Zichony, charming daughter of a Hungarian minister. That night, Leonard borrows $1000 from Ian who wonders what his friend wants with such a large sum. Arriving early for dinner at the Austrian Ministry, Ian waits in the conservatory. After a short while, the most beautiful woman he ever saw appears. Unobserved from his nook, Ian sees her cry. From the house a man calls "Lolita", and, drying her tears, the girl goes inside. Later, Ian sees her surrounded by eager gallants and asks for an introduction. He is stunned to learn she is the notorious Countess von Waldeck. But, despite this, he is dazzled by her beauty and naivete. Leonard arrives late and has eyes for no one but Lolita. He contrives to sit next to her at dinner. Ian notices an officer of the Bulgarian Royal Guards, sitting at the far end of the table, glaring at Leonard. There is a cruel, tight expression about the officer's lips. After dinner, the ladies leave the dining room.

CHAPTER V

At once cigarettes and cigars were produced and the air became blue, first with cigar smoke and second with the things Ian Gray told Leonard Holt when he took the latter aside and read what he called the Riot Act.

"You triple-dyed ass! You blithering idiot, what's gotten into you? If you've got to go mooning around the von Waldeck girl for lord's sake don't be so infernally brazen and public about it! First thing you know, Ilya's brother will be pulling your nose in public, there'll be a scandal and that will be the end of your career as a diplomat."

Leonard Holt's handsome pink features hardened. "Shut up," he snarled. "Not even you can talk to me like that. I'm free, white and twenty-one."

"You don't act like it," was the other's bitter retort. "And if you haven't got sense enough to save yourself, I'm going to do what I can. You owe something to Ilya. Have you gone crazy?"

For the first time since they had met during the dark days of 1917 the two men stood glaring at each other, faces flushed and hands closed. Then, as usual, the weaker gave in.

"Oh, damn it, Ian, don't look at me like that! I can't stand it. I'm queer these days—all upset. I'm sick—fed up with the whole business. Truth is, I love Lolita. I worship her—adore her! I know I'm a cad to say this when I'm engaged to Ilya but—damn it—I can't help myself—she carries one away—like a drug addict!"

Leonard fell silent, staring miserably at the tip of his cigarette.

Instantly Ian softened. "Look here. You heard what was said at that cocktail hour? This Lolita's lovely and simple appearing. I'll grant, but you've got to get a grip on yourself. Don't throw away the love of a really sweet and clever girl like Ilya. I tell you she is one in a thousand and she worships you."

"That's the worst of it!" sighed the shorter man. "I feel like a pervert. I've told myself so a hundred times a day for the last two weeks—Ilya's so damnably loyal. He raised stricken gray eyes. "But—I can't help myself—there's something about Lolita that just disorients me, she annihilates my sense of values—I know it's ruinous to play with her, but I—I—damn it, Ian, I am crazy with love for her!"

"You're not," snapped the big man in evening clothes, the miniature decorations sparkling with the vehemence of his negation. "Any thing so fierce and quick as this silly infatuation of yours is bound to burn out even quicker. Then you'll wake up to find your career at an end and the girl you loved hating the thought of you. Think it over, Len, is it worth it?"

From the far end of the room sounded the laughter and voices of the other men guests who, in a brilliantly-uniformed throng, had gathered to listen to Captain d'Armonot's latest story.

"Tell me," said Ian suddenly, "who's that fellow in the dark green uniform—the little fellow with the long nose and the black moustache?"

When Leonard's eyes encountered that faintly menacing figure, he stiffened and bit his lip.

"That," said he, "is Colonel Sobeloff, a Bulgarian bird of some sort who fell in love with Lolita when she was in Sofia a couple of months ago. She's told him a dozen times to stop utterly fresh and unsoiled as Coleridge's "Sea-born Cythera," and her eyes, when they met his, were as clearly blue as the waters of the Mediterranean.

Could it be this girl who had led di Valasto to a suicide's grave? Could this laughing and fragile creature really have been responsible for that young British diplomat's disgrace at Bucharest? It seemed utterly impossible, yet here was the morose and dangerous Sobeloff brooding in the background, and here was Leonard in the act of ruining his career for love of her.

Suddenly a thought struck him. All this strange girl's victims, or near-victims were, in some degree, connected with international affairs.

"You are to be long in Budapest, Mademoiselle la Comtesse?" he inquired.

following her, but he won't. He's a crazy sort, swears he'll kill her and himself some day if she won't marry him."

He looks quite capable of it. Remember, Leonard, a Bulgarian isn't troubled half so much about killing a supposed enemy as the next man. Watch out, and for lord's sake get back to earth before it's too late!"

The younger man's face lit in a pathetic admiration. "I will—and you're a mighty good egg, Soldier!" And Leonard impulsively squeezed his hand, then strode off, ever followed by the smoldering regard of the stocky Bulgarian.

"Of all the crazy idiots!" growled Ian Gray as he unobtrusively approached the group of listeners to the French artilleryman's story. His attention, however, was not on d'Armonot's cleverly risqué anecdote as he edged around the circle until he found himself directly behind the dark-browed Colonel Sobeloff. As he had feared, there was indeed a certain ominous bulge under the Bulgarian's tunic back.

"An automatic," he decided. "Probably a .32. Well, well." And forthwith he determined to pay close attention to the movements of the short but powerfully built officer in green and gold.

Presently Ian made an opportunity to again address that maddeningly beautiful enigma who went under the name of Lolita von Waldeck. Something like a duelist who approaches the field of honor and studies his opponent, he viewed the white-clad girl with a thoroughness and clear-headedness that surprised him. But the more he scanned her unpaired, unlined and placid features, the more utterly at sea he felt. Lolita von Waldeck seemed as

Sankey sang as a solo "The Home of the Soul."

Program Launched to Increase United States Merchant Fleet

Reserve Marine Strength Needed to Supplement Naval Force
Kennedy Heads Newly Created Commission

By MAURICE MERRYFIELD

International Illustrated News Writer

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Not since the frantic rush of shipbuilding following the United States' entry into the World war—a frenzied period of construction designed to provide bottoms for transporting war supplies—has there been such a determined effort as the present one to build up a merchant marine.

The recently created maritime commission is the new federal agency entrusted with the responsibility of building up an adequate merchant fleet. Joseph P. Kennedy is chairman of this commission and moving force in the campaign to put the United States on a par with other nations on the high seas.

Chief factor in the federal government's interest in building up the merchant marine is to create a naval reserve power which can be converted into an effective auxiliary in time of war. The importance of this was amply illustrated during the World war when a drastic shortage of tonnage hampered transportation across the Atlantic and forced the United States to depend to great extent on foreign shipping facilities.

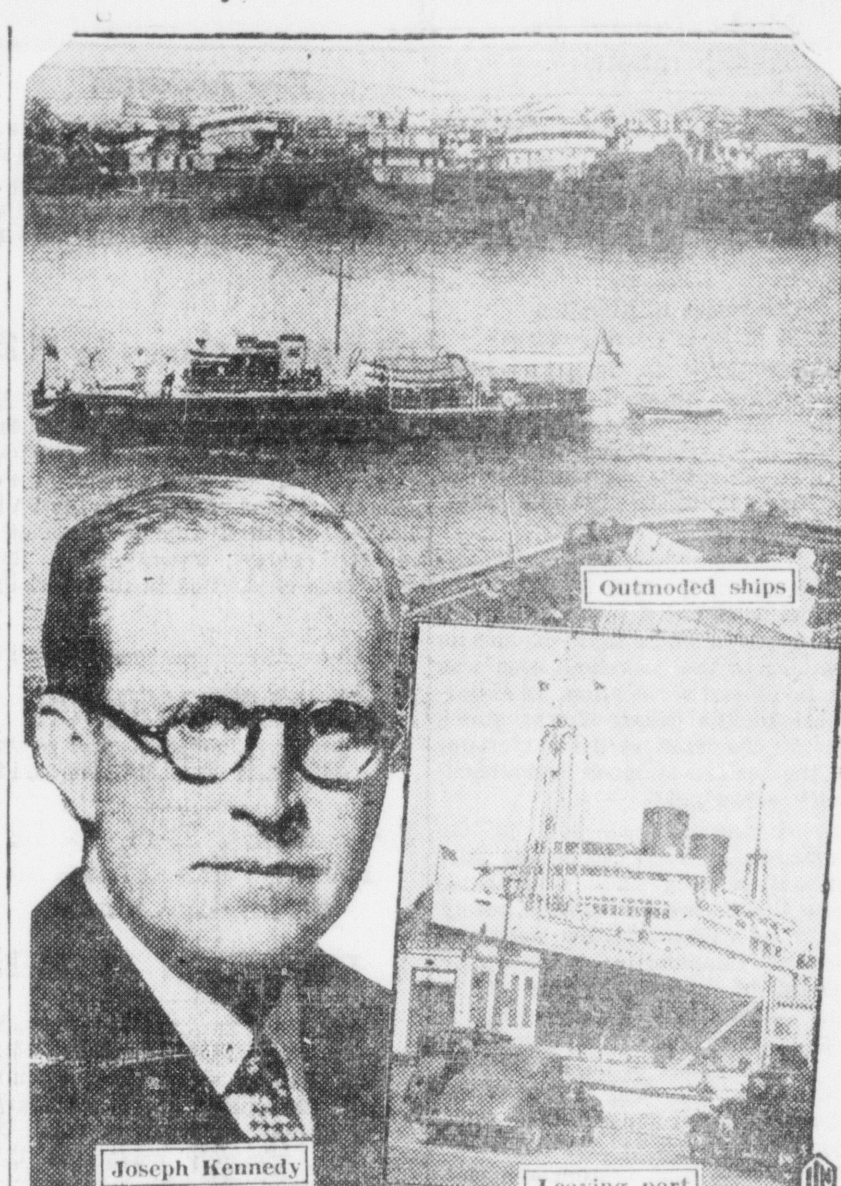

Britain Dominates Seaways

Despite the fact that there are hundreds of wartime vessels lying at anchor off the seaboard, many of them unused for years, most of them are in need of considerable repairs and improvements before they are commissionable. If at all. Numerous efforts have been made to sell them, but most of the boats are slow and outmoded, and all have suffered from their extended idleness.

The United States ranks third among world nations in the size of its merchant marine, but only slightly ahead of Germany. Great Britain's commercial fleet heads the list with 13,200,000 gross tons; Japan 3,025,000 gross tons; United States 2,790,000 gross tons; Germany 2,747,000 gross tons, and Italy 2,291,000 gross tons.

Roosevelt Backs Plan

While these comparative figures reveal how dominant is Britain's position on the high seas, they fail to indicate quite accurately how serious is the position of the United States in this respect. Figuring the average life of a ship at 20 years, approximately 90 per cent of the U. S. merchant marine will be outmoded by 1942, according to Kennedy.

There are now about 1,500 ships under the American flag, although less than 400 of these are in foreign service. Of this number the great majority are operating with the financial assistance of mail contract subsidies. Only a small number of the vessels used either in coastwise or foreign service are capable of better than 12 knots.

The situation was recently summarized by President Roosevelt in a message to congress when he made the statement:

"There is no sense in talking about an adequate or first-class merchant marine in the face of such facts. For us an adequate merchant marine has to be a new merchant marine. The question comes: What are we going to do about it? The answer is to build ships! The best and most modern ships—and build them right away."

Its scenic wonders—was not brought fully to the attention of its vacation-bound and nature-hunting motorists and tourists from other states. That situation soon will be corrected.

The State Publicity Commission, of which I have the honor to be chairman, is about to launch an intensive campaign to place before other states the intrinsic facts about Pennsylvania's marvelous mountain scenery, gorgeous panoramas, and matchless pictures of natural beauty. Newspapers, radio, magazines, bill boards and other forms of communication will be used in depicting the true story of "Penn's Woods" from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico, from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

This educational campaign will feature the diversity of landscape that provides an ideal "garden spot" for drivers. A few minutes' drive can take the motorist to the cooling breezes of the high elevations, the soothing quietness in the fastnesses of the forests, the picturesque valleys skirting winding streams, majestic waterfalls and placid lakes, or to a restful stay in one of the hundreds of farm communities.

True, scenic grandeur may be found throughout the United States. The West has its painted deserts, massive peaks and huge trees. Many states point to their long and level prairies that stretch for miles. But for hill and valley, forest and open country, stream and river, I say our own State cannot be bested.

LANDRETH NINE WINS DOUBLE WEEK-END BILL

Wonderful hurling by "Dutch" Henry and "Howie" Black gave the Landreth Seeds a double victory over the week-end. Saturday, the Farmers trounced the Riverton A. A. team, 15-0, at Riverton and yesterday, the Landrethmen beat out the Riverside team, 6-2, on the home diamond.

Although slapped for ten hits, "Howie" Black kept them well-scattered and in the pinches had the Jersey club batters hitting the breeze. No fewer than thirteen Riverside batters went down on strikes. Meanwhile those who waited for free tickets were out of luck for Black wasn't in a charity mood and not one reached base in this manner.

Yesterday inaugurated "Ladies' Day" at the local park and many of the opposite sex took advantage of Landreth's offer and sat in the bleachers.

Paced by "Frankie" Griggs who crashed out two home runs, the Landreth's players had little trouble in smothering the Riverton team on the latter's field. In this fray, "Dutch" Henry held the Jersey club to four bingles. Every regular player on the Landreth team with the exception of Purcell and Deboskey shared in the hitting column.

"Barney" Frappoli gave the fans a thrill in this tilt with his sensational fielding, he handling seven hard chances without an error.

LEGION JUNIORS WIN WITH BETZ ON MOUND

(By A. P. "Chart" Tomlinson)

Behind the nine-hit pitching of Vance Betz, Bristol defeated Doylestown by the score of 7-3. Betz proved to be a money ball player when he managed to pull himself out of several holes. Eastburn, Doylestown's pitcher, allowed as many hits as did Betz.

Johnson and LaPolla led the local hitters, with the former getting three hits out of five trips to the plate, and the latter getting three out of as many trips to the plate. Wilbur VanLenten featured in the field for the locals, handling eight chances errorlessly.

Today the boys will travel to Quakertown to seek another victory. LaPolla will be the probable pitcher. He thus far has won the only game he has pitched, that being against the strong McCole Post of the Philadelphia County League.

Sheet and Tube, Bethlehem and Inland Steel.

Murray, whose headquarters is in Pittsburgh, was planning to come to Youngstown today to rally his forces. He insists the fight has "just begun" and that the C. I. O. eventually will win out, assertions that are ridiculed by company executives.

The conference of steel executives with Major-General Light aroused considerable speculation here. In the absence of any specific explanation it was believed an attempt may be under way to extend the operation of martial law to the Cleveland district.

Approximately 8,000 men are on strike in Cleveland in the Truscon Steel, Corrugated-McKinney, Upson Nut, and Sheet and Tube, Inc.

The National Guardsmen are on duty in Mahoning, Trumbull and Stark counties. After Governor Martin L. Davey declared a modified form of martial law in the two former counties he extended military rule to Stark county where a number of Republic subsidiary plants had been in the throes of a strike.

THIS WEEK—150 YEARS AGO

The Story of the Constitutional Convention of 1787

BY RAYMOND PITCAIRN

FOR THE PEOPLE

One hundred and fifty years ago this summer a group of fifty-five Americans planned and wrote an historic document that stands as one of the high lights of human achievement.

It sounded a new note in government. It made government of the people, by the people, for the people practical and lasting. It became the inspiration and the model of democratic governments throughout the world.

It was the Constitution of the United States.

In this and succeeding articles will be told each week the story of how, on the same dates of 150 years ago, those fifty-five men wrought through a sweltering Philadelphia summer, to give the American ideal of freedom both reality and permanence.

The Convention that wrote our Constitution opened formally on May 25, 1787, at Philadelphia, in the historic structure already famous as the birthplace of the Declaration of Independence. Its purpose was to achieve a more practical form of union than was provided under the Articles of Confederation, which had proved so inadequate as to be called "a rope of sand."

To many contemporary observers that opening session seemed relatively unimportant. But later historians learned to acknowledge it as one of the most significant sessions of the entire summer. For on that date the Convention chose George Washington as its presiding officer. Although his voice was seldom heard thereafter in debate, into the final product of that Convention, the American Constitution, was woven much of the strength and grandeur of his character.

Realizing, but undaunted by, the difficulties ahead, Washington faced them with a soldier's simple faith and courage.
